Price: £775.00

An original British Military watch for a ridiculously small amount of money, this CWC W10 from 1977 would have been issued to the British Military having been launched in the early 70's.

A manual wind movement that provides a power reserve of up to 40 hours, the watch in question is in fine working order. Plastic crystal and Tonneau steel case with a one piece split winding stem.

Approved by the British Military due to its reliability and toughness it was only the British Military that issued this watch.

38mm case including crown and 42mm lug to lug. Although originally designed to go to 50 meters it is not thought that would be the case today.

Black dial with T stamped for Tritium and the broad arrow signifying the military. White Arabic hour markers that would have been luminous in their day. Original hands and dial.

Caseback markings:

W10-6645-99

Broad Arrow

840/77

The watch itself appears to be in very good all round condition considering this watch would have seen service. There is of course marks and scratches as we would expect from a tool watch however nothing that is of detriment to the watch, its looks or working order.
