The ring is a Renaissance Revival piece,

The central gemstone appears to be rock crystal, which is a clear, colourless variety of quartz.

The central rock crystal gemstone is cut in a square shape.

The prongs holding the crystal are designed to be both functional and decorative, ensuring the stone is secure while adding to the overall ornate appearance.

Renaissance Revival jewellery became popular in the 19th century, particularly during the Victorian era. This style sought to emulate and celebrate the art and craftsmanship of the Renaissance period, often incorporating motifs such as scrolls, filigree, and elaborate settings. The Revival pieces were not mere copies but rather inspired adaptations that integrated contemporary tastes with historical elements.
