

Victorian silver and 9kt gold rose - cut diamond cluster ring £3,480.00

This Victorian-era ring features a cluster design, a popular style of the time, characterized by its central focus on a large rose-cut diamond surrounded by smaller rose-cut diamonds. The diamonds are set in silver, a typical practice during the Victorian period to enhance the appearance of the stones. The ring's setting showcases a bezel with a scalloped edge, holding the central diamond securely while allowing maximum light reflection.

Historical Context:

The Victorian period (1837-1901) was known for its elaborate jewellery designs, often reflecting the sentimental and romantic ideals of the time. Cluster rings, like this one, were particularly favored for their ability to showcase multiple diamonds in an intricate yet balanced design.
