One of the so called 12 'Dirty Dozen' watches created for the British military of Defence around 1944/45. This Vertex is not the most prized of the 12 and was made in a bigger quantity (thought to be 13,000) than some of the others however it is becoming harder to find good examples.

In line with the other 11 these watches had to be made to a strict MOD requirement and so are all very similar in appearance. This Vertex has a 35/36mm steel case, black dial with subsidiary seconds dial at the bottom (hand has been replaced at some point). Radium filled hour markers and hands.

Original crown with plexiglass and fitted to a generic green textile strap. Having passed through our workshop in fine working order.

General condition - as you would expect shows marks and scratches in line with a used military watch however nothing to significant.

Operating from a Caliber 59 manual wind movement.

Dial markings clearly showing Vertex and the MOD broad arrow, rear caseback markings:
