Design: These earrings exhibit Grima's hallmark style with their textured, abstract, and organic forms. Grima was particularly known for using textured gold to create sculptural, nature-inspired jewellery.

Andrew Grima (1921-2007) was one of the most influential British jewellery designers of the 20th century. His work was widely recognised for its innovative and bold use of materials, and he was known for pushing the boundaries of traditional jewellery design. Grima's designs were favoured by the British Royal family and other notable figures. He won numerous prestigious awards, including the Queen's Award for Export and the Duke of Edinburgh Prize for Elegant Design.
